

Eve's Land

Stomp! Stumble! Crash! It was the day that changed my life forever, not in a bad way yet not in a good way either, but it was definitely a very memorable time in my life.

It all started one very cold evening, when I was walking on the sidewalk to get my groceries. It was snowing and my head started aching. I thought that if I quickly bought all my things and headed home, I could take care of the headache. My headaches were normal since I lived in one of the coldest cities in Antarctica. I don't know why I chose to live here but I guess I thought it would be fun (not at all).

Anyway, I was walking bearing the pain and the cold when I passed Frozenwood house. There was an old woman who asked me to stop walking for a bit and join her for a hot drink with some cookies (choco chip my favourite). I agreed, not only for the drink and cookies but also because Antarctica is safe for anything since the population was low and everyone thought that there would be nothing to take.

I quickly hurried towards the lady. I had the hot drink and cookies then I remembered that I still had to go shopping. I thanked the old lady and headed out. When she said, "Watch out for the black rabbit, he's evil!" I nodded thinking she might have gone crazy when there were no rabbits in Antarctica. Suddenly, I blacked out. TV static surrounded my head while a strange voice spoke to me and said, "Hello, are you there? Can you hear me?"

I woke up feeling nauseated. I asked hoarsely, "Where is your nearest bathroom?" as I was about to vomit. Then he replied,

"To the right. Let me know if you need anything!" I hurried to the bathroom without seeing anything, just my hands covering my mouth. After I relieved myself, I walked out and saw everything I loved - coco chip cookies, a whole land of it, and McDonalds food with KFC. It was labelled Food Island. Next to it was Arts and Crafts Wonderland and other islands to explore.

As I wandered back to where I had been, I saw a humanoid black rabbit with a red suit on like he came from Alice in Wonderland, but he was the K-mart version. Could it be the black rabbit the old lady was talking about? I shook the feeling off and opened my mouth to speak. Obviously, I asked the question that every person I have read about asks before, "Where am I? Is this a dream?" and of course he answers, "Of course not, everything in Eve's land is real! Why would I be talking to you then? Anyway, my name is Xavier. How about you, fellow stranger that I met 30 seconds ago?" Rethinking my life choice, I muttered the words, "Eve Grace Anderson."

As soon as I said that he shifted and said, "Quickly follow me. We have been looking for you!" He jumped into a narrow hole with many decorations. I went whizzing down and in a second I was in an evil looking base with all the things I liked but my mother said were bad for me. I immediately knew that Xavier the black rabbit was an evil rabbit named Spoto that I used to own as a child. Apparently after my likeness over him lost, he fell into Eve's land. Then spent all this time planning for this so he would lure me into his machine of danger because I trusted him!

Before the doors closed, I hopped out of the not very well-planned machine, letting my fighting skills kick in. I kicked him and punched him and did all sorts of fighting moves, leaving him out cold for just enough time to escape. I looked all over the room. His minions cowardly hid and led me to the exit.

It was a narrow hallway covered in cute cat photos and cute dogs as well, which was surprising, but it would be why the machine wasn't that good at its job. One was chosen to show me the way out if I didn't hurt him. As he was showing the way out of this wonderland place, he kept getting distracted with the cute photos, which I had to admit I also did stop to look at their cute, adorable, chubby faces.

We finally got out to the portal that divided the mortal realm to this weird wonderland. Without turning back, I ran. Suddenly I noticed that Spoto was right behind me catching up. I took a leap for it and landed safely inside my home, still in the same clothes I wore and a chill on the back of my neck. As quick as the portal opened, it quickly closed forever.

Still to this day I wonder if I be safe from Spoto.

by Emily Varkas