

One Saw Without His Eyes, The Other Plainly Looked

Two animals born together, were friends. The first light had startled them. One saw without his eyes, the other plainly looked. The cat looked up and saw the sky, so bright and wonderful. He saw the birds and the trees. The fresh air blew in his hair. "What a lovely day" he sang.

The sloth saw the muddy, muddy ground, and cried in disgust, "The ground looks filthy."

The rain came down, pelting on the shed a few metres away. One said, "What a lovely swift breeze, the air smells fresh and it's nice and cool." The other cried, "The rain is so heavy. I do not like it, muddy puddles everywhere. Slushy sloshy rain on my hair. I am not liking this. It is so painful."

After the rain stopped, the cat cried out, "What lovely light." The sloth growled at the sight, "Why do I have to like it?" he moaned.

One saw without his eyes, the other plainly looked. "Let's try something new." The cat suggested. "Why don't we try to fly?" The sloth slumped down. The cat sat up. They slowly, slowly climbed the tree. The animals tried and tried and tried again. "Oh well" said the cat, " Why did we have to do it?" said the sloth.

Years and years had passed now. They were very old. One saw without his eyes, the other plainly looked. They slowly, slowly walked along the ground, slumping. "I think I'm going to die," said the sloth.

Time passed and passed. The sloth sat on the rock and said "Oh what a world it has been. I am too blind to see, too weak to walk. Why, why, why. Why has this world been so cruel." He took his last breath then died on the rock.

The cat was too old and now too fragile. The cat sat down on a rock, ready to die and looked around him. He cried in relief , "A world it has been, all the birds and the trees, the sky and the ocean, the fresh air and the animals. How wonderful the world is."

Not long after the cat also died.

Two animals died. Which one would you be...?