The Lightkeeper Legacy

Woosh... The strong wind gushed side to side with the storm arising without a warning. One moment, the deep sea was relaxed and calm under the silver sky, the next, it was windy and foggy with a black bruised sky. The waves crashed the boat, tearing it to small pieces. "No! Is anyone out there? Please help me-" exclaimed Aria as he got slammed into the wave with full force.

Aria slowly woke up to find herself on a forgotten island all alone. There was a distant thunder surrounding a mysterious gloomy ruined lighthouse. "Oh my gosh, there's a lighthouse maybe. I can find someone to help me," Aria murmured, staring at her only last hope. Aria hurried to the light house rapidly puffing air. "Finally I made it!" yelled Aria. Creak... The rusted red door slowly opened as Aria peeped her head. Inside was, ~~cobwebs~~ a flickering light, roaches and a mysterious brown, leather book journal.

"Oh, no there's no one here, I should just go. Wait a second what this? It looks like a journal." Aria opens the first page then notices her great grandma's name. Then she flips to the next few pages and sees her name, that says "Keep on the legacy," in her mum's handwriting. "What? What does this mean? Me being a light keeper? Huh!" Aria continued reading which read, "You are a light keeper and you will need to find a burning flame to attach to the light upstairs to receive back light to the world because without the light the world will lose it's colours and this storm will go on forever."

Aria stared at the page for a long time to process what just happened, with all the pressure on her. "Uhh- This can't be real! Wake up aria! Wake up! Um I don't think this is fake anymore I need to go find the flame now!" panickilly shouted aria.

aria shot into action like fireworks. aria found an old flashlight and started looking for the flame all around the isolated island. Then it finally happened, she found the flame! aria zoomed immediately to the lighthouse and placed the flame right into place. Colours filled the air with the beam of light stretching far across the ocean. Then suddenly a small sail boat appeared near shore, aria's face flashed with joy she started sprinting to her final exit!
