

The Book of Adventures

Bang! A big book fell onto the wooden floor. Stacey and Ivy rushed up the stairs to investigate with Grandma trailing behind. "I've never seen that book in my entire life, yet it's so dusty and the pages are turning yellow," Grandma explained. Ivy wiped off some dust with her palm. "The Book of adventures," she whispered. Stacey's eyes shone like the sun. "I will leave you two to investigate, I need to get back to my cookies," said Grandma, fluffing her apron. "Ok," Stacey chirped, cheerfully. She turned the dusty pages of the old book with Ivy looking over her shoulder, until they found a page that really stood out. On this page, was a magical wizard, he had dark, bushy hair like a bear, chocolate brown eyes and a big hat that matched his cloak, but in his hand was a large wand that pointed to a big purple portal on the wall. "This book must be magical," Ivy whispered. They jumped into it, amazed by the colour and mystery. A cold chill ran down Ivy's spine. "We should go back, we don't know where this will lead to." "Just trust the process," Stacey replied.

Soon, they saw a magical wizard. He looked exactly like the one in the book. Same purple hat. Same dark, bushy hair and same brown eyes. "Welcome to Wizard Wonderland," he practically yelled. Boom! Lightning struck the ground in front of them. "Everyone RUNN!!" he wailed. "The dark wizard has arrived!" Suddenly, Stacey had an idea but she had to act quickly. "Can you help me find a wand to defeat the wizard?" She asked Ivy. "Sure," Ivy replied. Over the next few minutes, Ivy and Stacey shouted as loud as a rooster, with a microphone, asking people for a wand until a kind woman came up to them with a wand and said, "Here is a wand you can use. It's very powerful." "Thank you," Ivy replied. Together, they defeated the dark wizard. Then a red and white striped portal opened, and they jumped inside.

Soon, they found themselves in a red and white tent. There was a large wooden stage and lots of seats. "Circus!" They exclaimed in unison. On the stage in front of them, a lady with brown hair, green eyes and a sparkly red jacket, stood holding the leash of an elephant. Suddenly, Ivy stood up on the chair. "This isn't right, these animals should not be tied up on leashes and shouldn't be in cages," Ivy explained. "I make the rules here, and I know they should." Britney, the lady said angrily. Then the elephant tossed Ivy a wand and she grinned. "How would you feel to be an elephant then?" She asked, loudly. "W.e...l...um." Britney stammered. But before she could get her words out, Ivy waved the wand and Britney turned into the elephant and the elephant turned into Britney. "That is much better," Stacey said. "yes," Ivy agreed.

Eventually, another portal opened and they walked into an underwater adventure. "Yes!" Ivy yelled enthusiastically. Stacey rolled her eyes. They kept walking until they saw a beautiful mermaid sitting on a seashell throne. She had bright ginger hair, ocean blue eyes, a tail and mermaid bandeau made of glimmering white pearls that shone like stars and a pink starfish crown. They finally reached her throne until they heard beautiful singing. All the mermaids started screaming but the queen tried to settle them. "It's just the sirens," she said, but Ivy and Stacey could not see any ugly sirens, only mermaids screaming and mermaids singing. "Wait, can sirens morph into mermaids?" Ivy asked. "Let me search it up on google," Stacey replied, "There's no wifi." So they told the queen that the sirens were the 'things' on the rocks and the mermaid guards locked them up. "Thank you so much girls!" The queen said, relieved. "For your bravery, you have earned a wish." Stacey and Ivy wished to go home, so the queen waved her wand and they were back in the attic. "That was a crazy adventure," whispered Ivy, as quiet as a mouse.
