The Magical Opposites

Yesterday, at twilight, there was a grand final match in NRL World. It was the West Bulldogs vs the Canterbury Tigers. It was an intense match. The Canterbury Tigers ran into the footy pitch the the West Bulldogs jogged on. It was going to be a tough match. The referee blew the whistle and the match started.

As the West Bulldogs ran down the 20-metre line then the 30 they were tackled. Their bright jerseys amazed the fans and really stood out. Then, something unexpected happened. For some weird reason, the rugby league ball started talking to the players. They were so distracted that it became a comedy.

After that, the dark green field started turning all these different colours depending on the players. It was ANNOYING! Then the referee blew the half time whistle. The referee tried to talk but he couldn't, only his whistle could. On the display screen, it said 'half 2nd'. It was so weird and swapped around. It was like they were in Opposite Land.

During the second half, Matt Burdon got the ball, but he turned upside down. Then Royce Hunt got the ball and magically knocked everyone out. A wiggly little ant crawled up onto Royce and kaboom, the tiny ant turned into the Queen Fly. It was amazingly cool. The Queen fly changed the ground into colours and patterns. The field turned into half white, half blue and then half red and half orange depending on the team colours. It was so cool!

Then with a flick of magic, the drab outlines were swept away, leaving behind a masterpiece of pure, swirling colour. The Canterbury Tigers had won! They lifted the trophy high into the air as golden confetti rained down from the sky.
