In the cold arctic mountains lived a poor polar bear that had two cubs but nothing to feed them. The cubs were starving and cold so they went out to try to find food for themselves but the little cubs were only eight months old and could barely move. Since the mum was trying to get food she didn't notice when the cubs were at the edge of the water and the ice beneath them cracked! The mother heard the cry's of the cubs but it was too late they were too far away to reach.

Then the ice fell beneath her and she was drowning because she was trapped beneath the ice. But then she saw a light, as her only opportunity she swam down. Her eyes were blinded from the light and then she saw clearly. She heard some beautiful music and a boat fell on her head. She saw a pian and a spoon in front of her and before she knew it she was playing a song with a friend she made that was a fluffy cat they played as a beautiful duet while the fluffy cat named Tiger played the piano.

SYMPHONY OF STORIES

but while the mother was carried off in symphonies and stories the young cubs were still on the piece of ice. It was getting dark quick ~~and~~ the little cubs had nothing to eat and were starving but the thing they wanted the most was the stories their mother sang, they couldn't sleep without it. The sun was setting in the dark snowy sky but a tiny bit of light ~~shimmered~~ shimmered in the clouds and just before the dark sky appeared they got sucked into the light. And just like their mother they were blinded for a while and opened their eyes with tiger intent of them.

Tiger knew their mother was disappointed that she couldn't see them so tiger did what he had to and reunited the family but it didn't stop there. Their love for stories and music grew fond and as soon as they knew it they were music making and story reading lovers.
